amsante Lektüre, zu lesen unterm Sonnenschirm am Comer See. Von Bibliofilo. Nachdem Meine Frau und ich wir vor Kurzem erst in unmittelbarer Nachbarschaft des Autors eine Bleibe am Comer See erstanden haben, interessierte uns der Erfahrungsbericht des Umzugs des Autors nach Italien allgemein und nach Moltrasio/Argegno im Einzelnen natürlich besonders. Man hat es beim Autor mit einem richtigen Redehaus zu tun, das unbeschwert vor sich hin plaudert. Manche Dinge, von denen er berichtet, sind interessant andere weniger aber alles in allem gibt der Autor einen angenehmen Gesprächspartner. Die Erfahrungen eines zutiefst britischen Immigranten, der wie alle Briten den Comer See liebt und sich so oft über Tatsachen wundert, welche für Italiener als natürlich empfunden werden (von der erdrückenden Bürokratie bis zum guten Essen), lesen sich amsant und unbeschwert. In seinem sffisanten Erzählstil und seinem Schalk ist der Roman eine angenehme Urlaubslektüre. Kennt man die Orte des Geschehens, hat man natürlich nochmals mehr vom Buch.

Kurzbeschreibung English artist Paul Wright and his partner, Nicola had had enough of Britain the 1990s recession and took themselves off to Italy - except that they had no work there and Paul could not speak a word of Italian! That didn't stop them diving head first into the life of their adopted village, Moltrasio, on the shore of Lake Como. They soon found work; Paul as a mural painter and Nicola in an office in Milan, Paul was recruited by the local football team and they both took part in the fabulous summer and Christmas festivals and the mangialonge - the 'long eats' where groups of locals drive off into the country to feast on the best local food and wines, all day. They gain a new neighbour, George Clooney, who gained great popularity amongst the locals, and they lose an older, very near neighbour, fashion designer Gianni Versace who brought back to rest in his native Moltrasio after he was gunned down in the USA. Paul's dry sense of humour and artistic observation brings the village of Moltrasio and its inhabitants to life, and he is guaranteed to make your mouth water with his wonderful descriptions of the local food.
