Maxwell Kirkwood has written a much needed corrective for those who have extended their theology to a point where suffering is no longer in their vocabulary. The author divides testing and trials into three areas: S.I.T.'s, D.I.T.'s and M.I.T.'s. These are Satan/suffering intended trials, discipline intended trials and Maturation intended trials respectively. In the book, we are taken through several Biblical examples of suffering, observing the who, how, what and why behind it and where God is in the trial. David Kirkwood readily admits that he does not have all of the answers at the outset but he does try to bring balance into areas where some in the Church have erred in their "suffering" theology. The book is not without its faults however. In many cases, he raises more questions than he answers. For instance, in dealing with the topic of weather and the christian's ability to pray a storm away, Kirkwood gives the impression that weather-related phenomena is less under the believer's jurisdiction than many in the Church may think. Also, as far as christians getting hurt in a weather-related accident, Kirkwood shrugs his shoulders and says that it comes with the territory of living on planet earth even though the Scriptures beare witness against this position by promising protection to those who fear God. This is just one example of the conundrums that are presented in the book. Again, if you want a corrective to your thinking about God's sovereignty, buy this book but do not look to it as a substantive theology on the subject of suffering. Leave that to the Bible.

Kurzbeschreibung If God loves me, why am I facing these difficulties? What did I do to deserve this? Am I being chastened by God or attacked by the devil? Is God trying to teach me something in all this? If youve ever found yourself asking the kinds of questions above, then this book is for you. David Servant offers satisfying, understandable answers to life trials and dilemmas. Kurzbeschreibung If God loves me, why am I facing these difficulties? What did I do to deserve this?
