Von Teresa This book reminded me of a quote by Eleanor Roosevelt: "A woman is like a tea bag ' you can't tell how strong she is until you put her in hot water." and Irma you certainly have proved that in your life. Thank you, Irma, for being a powerful example that enriches my life. Your strength is a beacon shining throughout your life and an inspiration I am keeping in my heart. When you mentioned "tsibili kuchen" in your book it made me think of "zwiebel kuchen", which is German for "onion cake". I would be happy to translate your grandmother's recipe for you.

Kurzbeschreibung "Through My Trifocals Backward" is a journey in time through a 93 year old set of eyes and sensibilities. Told in an often whimsical voice, starting with her actual birth experience, the author expounds on her storybook childhood, a rebellious adolescence, the realities of war, a fated marriage and motherhood. Through narrative and prose the author eloquently conveys her awareness of the human condition, speaking to all parts of the whole, from frivolity and wit, to contemplative soberness. She recounts a myriad of stories - some will turn a grin with their lightheartedness, while others will undoubtedly evoke tears - but all paint a vivid picture of life lived to its fullest. While reading this deeply engaging memoir, you will come to know the woman full of humor who chooses to laugh rather than brood over the irreversible condition known as aging. Her motto is that life offers a multitude of choices, its paths veering in all directions. The route taken is up to you.
