Enchanting GuidebookVon Annika LenaThomson takes the reader on a compelling journey through European metropolises, drawing pictures so unique that one feels the cities coming to life, charming the reader to tag along this adventurous trip across the continent. As the recipient of letters sent from abroad, the reader not only becomes an immediate part of the story but also feels like a fellow traveler. Distinct descriptions, factual details and historical particulars are interwoven with distant memories of the writers past. Are these rich writings meant for the anonymous reader, a lover left behind or the man in the mirror? The mlangé evokes a captivating feeling of stumbling between day-dreams and realities experienced at different times and different destinations. Subtle but precise observations of people and places open the readers eye to undiscovered characteristics of Europes major cities, the poetic style of writing and romantic descriptions of scenery and events make one wanting to grab the backpack and leave immediately Leave to discover the various facets of this continent that Thomson describes, so full of tradition and modernity, unison and divergence.
