They examine the complex emotions of unforgiveness. They address the problems of an inability to forgive, an inability to receive forgiveness, and an inability to forgive oneself.

Kurzbeschreibung This book helps pastoral counselors present God's grace in healing through forgiveness. Individuals who have built walls of bitterness out of past pain are shown how the decision to forgive can liberate and restore. Kurzbeschreibung This book helps pastoral counselors present God's grace in healing through forgiveness. Individuals who have built walls of bitterness out of past pain are shown how the decision to forgive can liberate and restore. Autorenkommentar Helping others forgive Written for clergy and Christian counselors who seek to help others experience healing of emotional wounds and freedom from bondage to the past, this book examines the dynamics of the forgiveness process and presents ways to help people move through this to healing and freedom. It offers tried and tested ways to counsel people struggling with forgiveness and, illustrating the application of the Strategic Pastoral Counseling model, shows how this can be done in five sessions or less. Included are detailed considerations of the common counseling problems of an inability to forgive self or others and an inability to receive the forgiveness of others. The book is richly supplemented by detailed case studies.
